

Preventive Medicine 32.06.01

Mode of Attendance: Full-time

Course duration: 3 years

Language: Russian/English

The field of professional activity of the programme graduates includes public health related to sanitary and epidemiological prevention. Types of professional activities of graduate students include research activities in the field of public health, improving the quality and duration of human life through applied research in biology and medicine; teaching activities in higher education programmes. The training programme offers both core major disciplines and courses aimed at preparing for teaching and research activities, with in-depth study of a foreign languages, history and science philosophy. Postgraduate students are taught according to individual education plans, and have an opportunity to choose additional disciplines, as well as one or more foreign languages. The programme curriculum includes a practical training at four University clinics, seven research institutes, Research center, and University departments. Upon thesis defence the graduates are issued state-recognized PhD diploma.